A MEMBER of Parliament recently summed up the following as the situaof English politics of te-day:

Lord Salisbury is in office, but not in power. His removal from office is only a question of tactics and days. The Tory chief managured to get thrown out of office on the home rule question, but his scheme has failed and he will be thrown out on some minor question. Mr. Gladstone can then come into power, propound his scheme and secure for it an ample discussion before the dissolution, which must follow the inevitable reinsal of the House of Lords to pass any home rule scheme. This refusal and dissolution will probably occur in the autumn.
